Argentine newspaper publishes massive obituary of femicide victims

By REUTERS

PUBLISHED: 16:43 EDT, 3 June 2020 | UPDATED: 16:43 EDT, 3 June 2020

By Oscar Lopez

MEXICO CITY, June 3 (Thomson Reuters Foundation) - A rgentina's largest newspaper on Wednesday published an obituary filling several pages with the names of more than 300 women and girls killed because of their gender, calling attention to the growing crime of femicide.

The Clarin newspaper printed the list to mark the five-year anniversary of the South American country's first "Not One Less" march held in protest of the rising femicide rate.

Argentina has recently seen a surge in femicides, with the number of women killed reaching a 10-year high under coronavirus lockdown last month, according to a leading rights group.

"Behind the statistics of femicides are the stories of women and girls who are murdered daily because of their gender in Argentina," the paper wrote in an editorial.

The list features more than 300 names, including transgender women, who were victims of femicide in the last year.

Accompanying each name was a description of the crime, such as "she was beaten to death by her partner."

"It's a way of making (the issue) visible ... by giving entity to these femicides that aren't just a number," said Ada Rico, president of local feminist group La Casa del Encuentro, which compiled the list of killings published by Clarin.

"They are women who were killed who had a history, who had sons, who had daughters," Rico told the Thomson Reuters Foundation.

The obituaries were published in conjunction with the Spotlight Initiative, a joint project of the United Nations and the European Union to combat violence against women. It published a similar obituary in Uruguay in 2018.

"Seeing all the names of the victims of femicides ... and transfemicides together affects you: it hurts," the United Nations wrote on Twitter. "It forces us to reflect

BM Genel Sekreteri António Guterres Milliyet için yazdı: KOVİD ve kadınlar

İlk verilere göre KOVİD-19 erkekler, özellikle de ileri yaştaki erkekler için daha fazla risk teşkil ediyor. Ancak, pandemi, toplumsal cinsiyet eşitsizliği dahil olmak üzere her çeşit eşitsizliği ortaya çıkarıyor ve istismar ediyor. Uzun vadede kadınların sağlığı, hakları ve özgürlüklerine olan etkisi hepimize zarar verebilir

30.04.2020 - 07:00 | Son Güncellenme: 30.04.2020 - 09:22

Kadınlar sokağa çıkma kısıtlamalarının ve karantina uygulamalarının ölümcül etkileri ile karşı karşıya kalıyor. Bu önlemler gerekli ancak istismarcı partnerleriyle kapana kısılan kadınlar için şiddete maruz kalma riskini artırıyor. Geçtiğimiz haftalarda ev içi şiddette yaşanan artış alarm zillerinin çalmasına yol açtı. İngiltere'deki en büyük destek kuruluşu kendilerini arayanların oranının yüzde 700 artış gösterdiğini açıkladı. Aynı zamanda kadınlara destek sağlayan hizmetler mali kesintiler ve kapanma riski ile karşı karşıya bulunuyor.

ONU e UE apoiam combate à violência doméstica contra as mulheres em Timor-Leste

Este artigo tem mais de um ano

As Nações Unidas e a União Europeia lançaram hoje em Timor-Leste a Iniciativa Spotlight, programa global de combate a todas as formas de violência contra as mulheres, com um investimento de 13,5 milhões de euros em três anos.

A iniciativa foi lançada hoje em Díli pela secretária de Estado para a Igualdade e Inclusão timorense, Maria José de Jesus, pelo responsável da ONU em Timor-Leste, Roy Trivedy, e pelo embaixador da União Europeia em Díli, Andrew Jacobs.

"O programa ajudará a reforçar o esforço que o Governo tem feito nos últimos anos, com vários parceiros, incluindo a sociedade civil e parceiros de desenvolvimento, para prevenir e combater a violência sobre as mulheres e as meninas" disse Maria José de Jesus

For girls and women, COVID-19 has been dangerous in more ways than one. Gender-based violence has surged worldwide in what the United Nations has deemed a “shadow pandemic.” But as we near the end of 2020, the sense of urgency that fueled the early response is fading — pushing this crisis further into the shadows.

What’s worse, this rise in domestic violence was not unexpected. As lockdown measures took effect — and girls and women were trapped with abusers and cut off from support services — survivors, advocates and experts all warned that domestic violence would spike. And they were right.

In the UK, the number of women murdered by their partners increased nearly three-fold during the first lockdown. In Turkey,

EFE Naciones Unidas — 11 de mayo de 2020 - 19:58h 0

La ONU anunció este lunes apoyo financiero para organizaciones de mujeres, sobre todo en los países más desfavorecidos, ante la gran amenaza que la pandemia del coronavirus está planteando a su trabajo sobre el terreno.

ONU Mujeres, la agencia de Naciones Unidas para la igualdad de género, explicó en un comunicado que va a facilitar asistencia a través de dos iniciativas, el Fondo para la Mujer, Paz y Acción Humanitaria y el fondo de la ONU para combatir la violencia contra la mujer.

El primero financiará a organizaciones de mujeres en 25 países que se enfrentan a conflictos o crisis y ha recibido ya más de 5.000 propuestas para ello por parte

Campaña ONU #YoMeOcupo ironiza modelo de hombres “ayudadores” para eliminar división sexual de tareas domésticas

Iniciativa Spotlight de la Unión Europea y Naciones Unidas busca visibilizar la carga femenina de trabajo doméstico y de cuidado en el hogar. Reflejo claro y brutal, dicen expertas, de la tradicional división sexual del trabajo que determina patrones culturales de comportamiento: hombres como proveedores y mujeres como cuidadoras.

The global pandemic has created another – what has been called The Shadow Pandemic – the rise and rise of domestic violence. Before the pandemic 243 million women and girls worldwide between the ages of 15 and 49 had experienced sexual and/or physical violence by an intimate partner.

Since the global lockdowns, those numbers have soared for many reasons including isolation with an abuser; health, security and money worries; movement restrictions; and cramped living conditions. Gender-Based Violence is a human rights abuse and to add to the conversation about what men should be doing to eliminate it, Daily Sun and The European Union Delegation to South Africa are hosting a webinar on December 9 at 6pm. December 10 is international human rights day.

Entitled Accountability: How Men Need to Show Up to Fight Gender-Based Violence, the webinar will be facilitated by Soul City Institute's Gail Smith.

MEXICO CITY, June 3 (Thomson Reuters Foundation) – A rgentina’s largest newspaper on Wednesday published an obituary filling several pages with the names of more than 300 women and girls killed because of their gender, calling attention to the growing crime of femicide.

The Clarin newspaper printed the list to mark the five-year anniversary of the South American country’s first “Not One Less” march held in protest of the rising femicide rate.

Argentina has recently seen a surge in femicides, with the number of women killed reaching a 10-year high under coronavirus lockdown last month, according to a leading rights group.

“Behind the statistics of femicides are the stories of women and girls who are murdered daily because of their gender in Argentina,” the paper wrote in an editorial.

The list features more than 300 names, including transgender women, who were victims of femicide in the last year.

First Person: supporting migrants on the COVID-19 frontline in Myanmar

Migrant Monitoring Group (MMG) | Volunteers at work in the quarantine facility on the Thai border with Myanmar.

1 November 2020 | Women

One of the far-reaching effects of the global lockdown brought on by the COVID-19 pandemic has been the return of migrant workers to their home countries. The UN is assisting the authorities in Myanmar in facilitating this homeward migration, with a focus on providing for the needs of women.

Myanmar has been preparing for the return of hundreds of thousands of workers – some 650,000 are in Thailand alone – and one of the key tasks was to set up quarantine facilities for those returning migrants and carry out awareness raising on COVID-19[®] health messaging and prevention of gender-based violence – a key concern among the women migrant returnees. Sandi Swe, who has been working in a quarantine facility since March 2020, shared her experience with UN News.

The United Nations is advocating immediate global action to end all forms of violence against women and girls in the midst of a global upsurge related to the spread of the COVID-19 pandemic across the world.

Reports from countries in every region suggest that restrictions in movement, social isolation, coupled with increased social and economic pressures are leading to an increase in violence in the home.

UN News spoke to the UN Deputy Secretary-General, Amina Mohammed about the issue, what is being done, and what governments, the UN, and others can do to prevent and address this

How I Was Raped For Years By My Step-Father – Survivor

Channels Television
Updated August 25, 2020

A rape survivor in Nigeria on Tuesday shared a shocking tale of how she was raped for years by a man she thought was her father.

Fatima Ada Isiaku was first sexually abused at the age of five. Her stepfather started off her nightmare by using his fingers on her.

“At the age of seven, the abuse became worse. I was a sex slave for complete seven years under my mother’s nose without her knowing that I was being abused,” she said during the UN Spotlight Initiative Town Hall on Sexual and Gender-Based Violence in Nigeria.

Though the practice has declined in prevalence globally, alarming new figures from the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA) predict that any progress could be off-set as a further 68 million girls face the risk of FGM by 2030.

The statistics from the UN were unveiled today as the world marks the 15th International Day of Zero Tolerance for Female Genital Mutilation (FGM).

“The new figures mean that this practice is threatening the life and well being of more girls and women than initially estimated,” the Coordinator of the UNFPA-UNICEF Joint Program on FGM, Nafissatou Diop, told IPS.

“You and I and everybody and the girl next door can be affected,” she
